“The Chimborazo Hospital Complex – A History”

In September, 1861, on the bluff above the James River just east of St. Johns Church, a workforce of slave laborers began construction on winter quarters for Confederate troops. The initial construction consisted of 87 buildings for enlisted men, 12 officers’ quarters, 3 hospitals, and one large bakery house with 2 capacious brick ovens. However, as early war casualties grew it became apparent that a major hospital facility would be required. Surgeon General Samuel P. Moore appointed Dr. James B. McCaw as Surgeon in Chief and instructed him to convert the barracks into a hospital. Chimborazo Hospital started receiving patients in October 1861. When construction was complete in 1862 the hospital comprised 150 buildings including 98 patient wards. These wards were divided into 5 divisions and each had a capacity of 600 patients. Dr. McCaw was in charge of a staff of more than 600 doctors, matrons, nurses, cooks, and teamsters supporting this operation.

In addition to the Chimborazo complex there were many other hospitals in the Richmond area supporting the needs of the wounded and sick. Tonight, Art will give us insight into hospitals and medical care in Richmond during the War for Southern Independence.

Mr. Arthur Wingo is a member of the Longstreet Camp #1247, a 24 year re-enactor as a member of Company G [Nottoway Grays] of the 18th Virginia Infantry, and a docent with the National Park Service at the Chimborazo Hospital Museum in Richmond. Art has had a lifelong interest in the War for Southern Independence and provides numerous talks to schools, SCV Camps, and UDC Chapters. It is our pleasure to have Art and his wife Diane joining us on the 23rd.

Bring a guest to our September meeting. Supper will be served at 6:30 and we will introduce Dr. Read at 7:30. Our buffet costs $17 per person. Non members please contact Ken Parsons at kparsons4@cox.net or 757-564-0878 to confirm reservations.

Trivia Question:
From which state did the most WBTS soldiers die and where are the most Union soldiers buried?
Answer: New York and Vicksburg, MS.

Ancestral Memorial Candle:
2nd Lt. William J. Gooldy, Co. D - 28th Va Infantry

Program:
Introduction of Guest Speaker by 1st Lieutenant Commander Jeff Toalson: Our guest speaker was Dr. Mallory Read of Norfolk, Virginia, who provided startling background information on the prevalence of syphilis among historical tyrants and compelling proof that Abraham Lincoln also suffered from this ailment, which was manifest in his unlawful and aggressive behavior during the WBTS. Dr. Read’s documentation and medical diagnoses provided a great deal of insight into the effects of syphilis, a common form of insanity, in the early and later behavior of the 16th Union Commander-in-Chief.

Committee Reports & Announcements:
Treasurer’ Report
Adjudant Ken Parsons indicated that we have $2237.05 in the bank. He also informed the Camp that the dues deadline is 1 Oct. and that the Camp had, to date, 15 Life Members.

Support the Troops
Compatriot Scott Summerfield reported that three boxes were sent to and received by our troop, Marine Sgt. Tommy Toquothy. The Camp needs continued support for supplies, packaging, and shipping.

Cemetery Report
Nothing significant to report at this time.

In the past four years we have had Camp members light memorial candles eleven times in honor of their ancestors. That is only about three per year!

Please provide 1st Lt. Commander Jeff Toalson with information on your ancestor and he will conduct additional research, coordinating with you and your family to select a night to honor ancestor.

The Piggott family was well established in James City County before 1800. Four sons of Pearson Piggott and his wife Lucy were born early in the nineteenth century and went on to become large landowners in the county. Several sons of the four brothers were of age to fight for the Confederacy. In the December 2010 edition of Picket Lines, we discussed George A. C. Piggott, son of Fielding and Elizabeth Piggott, who served in the 5th Virginia Cavalry and is buried at Olive Branch Christian Church in an unmarked grave. Fielding’s brother, Nathaniel P. Piggott had at least two sons who fought for the south. The home farm for the Nathaniel Piggott family was “Farmville” located in present day Norge. Farmville Lane was the entrance to this 662 acre tract.

Lewis H. Piggott, born about 1828, was Nathaniel’s son by his first wife. Not much is known of his life before the 1860 census when he was listed in his father’s household as “farming for his father.” He enlisted in Company C, 32nd Virginia Infantry, in Richmond on December 19, 1862. His service record is sketchy. At some point, he was detailed as company cook by a certificate from the Medical Board. He was present on the company roll in January and February 1865. An article published in the Virginia Gazette in 1909 stated that he was captured at Five Forks, and his service record indicated that he was paroled at Appomattox Courthouse on April 9, 1865.

After the war, Lewis Piggott’s life is shadowy. He was back in James City County for the 1870 census where he continued to farm and does not seem to have married. His father had died in December 1860, and Lewis, along with other siblings, was mentioned in court documents after the war dealing with settling the estate. He disappeared from all records around 1880 and probably died around that time. There are seven unmarked graves at Olive Branch Church attributed to the Nathaniel Piggott family, and it seems probable that he rests in one of those graves.

Nathaniel P. Piggott’s second wife was Mary Ann Bowden, sister of the notable Union sympathizer, Lemuel Bowden, who lived in Williamsburg. Among their children was a son, Nathaniel D. Piggott, who was born on January 9, 1844, in James City County.

Very little is known of his early life. It seems as though the family may have refugeed to Richmond at some point in 1862. On November 6, 1862, the Richmond Dispatch reported that Mrs. Mary Ann Piggott and her children, Nathaniel, Mary Ellen, Eugenia and Isabella were being held at Castle Thunder on charges of spying for the enemy. Undoubtedly, being Bowden’s sister, Mary Ann was under suspicion. Her step-son, Lewis Piggott, and her step-daughter’s husband, Volusko Vaiden, posted $500.00 bail for each of these detainees. Mary Ann testified that she had provided food and supplies for the Confederate Army whenever they were near her farm. Charges were ultimately dropped, and they were allowed to return to James City County.

Perhaps this incident spurred Nathaniel D. Piggott on serve the cause. Soon after becoming nineteen years old, he enlisted as a private in Company H, 5th Virginia Cavalry, on April 1, 1863, in Culpeper, Virginia. He was absent on horse detail in November and December of that year and was captured January 20, 1864. He was back on the company roll in February and did not appear on the Federal POW rolls. His service records stop here and provide very little information.

Nathaniel D. Piggott was living on the home farm in 1870. He inherited two tracts of land from his father’s estate totaling 374 acres. One of these tracts, “Foster’s,” was located across present day Richmond Road from Farmville Lane. The house still stands today. He was Clerk of the Circuit Court in Williamsburg for a brief period of time. U. S. Post Office ledgers list him as Postmaster in Williamsburg from 1873 to 1880. His health must have broken down after this time for he died on March 13, 1884, in the Eastern Lunatic Asylum and was buried in Cedar Grove Cemetery. His estate paid $7.50 for part of a lot in the cemetery, and $51.12 to R. B. Servant for funeral expenses. Additionally, his estate had a wooden fence constructed around the grave. Inflation has certainly gone viral comparing these prices to burial prices today!

How many battles were fought during the WBTS?

Which state had the most battles and which county or region within that state had the most?

These are the memoirs of the Captain of the 'Shenandoah.' It follows the ship for her birth thru her destruction of the whaling fleet in the Bearing Straits in June of 1865 and then her sail around South America all the way to England to surrender. Very interesting.

"Nathan Bedford Forrest - First with the Most" by Robert Self Henry, 1991, New York, hardback, 558 pages

This is a biography of Forrest's entire life. The bulk of the book is spent on his service and significant space is devoted to his detached, independent operations where he showed his tactical genius. The book also provides insights into his prewar and postwar life. Considered one of the better biographies of Forrest.

"The Chickamauga Campaign" by Patrick Abbazia, 1998, Bryn Mawr, hardback, 184 pages large format

Very good basic coverage, maps, and pictures of the Chickamauga Campaign and also discussions of Tullahoma, Murfreesboro, and Chattanooga to a lesser degree.
